» According to the Art Basel Report 2023, global art and antiques sales in 2022 rebounded to exceed pre-pandemic levels, achieving the second highest totals ever recorded.

The accompanying Hiscox Online Trade report 2023 noted a 6% rise in online sales to $10.8 billion, accounting for 16% of all global trade in art and antiques, and 29% of all dealer sales. Importantly, Hiscox also notes that trust in online transactions grew significantly during the pandemic, with 44% more people buying online now than in 2019.

The costs of dealing have risen significantly owing to various factors, making online marketplaces an even more attractive option. As more dealers move much of their business online, there is an increasing need for more targeted services for those dealers. Having recognised this some time ago, Ronati is ready to help them streamline their activity with Ronati Studio, a suite of tools that will help them save time, attract new customers and maximise profit potential.

At LAPADA, the Association of Art & Antiques Dealers, we recognise that these trends make an excellent working knowledge of online marketplaces a must for our members, as they look to expand their interests. These marketplace guides are part of that process, and we welcome their clarity and usefulness, which together illustrate the focused approach our partnership with Ronati adopts. Together we recognise that dealers want to spend their time sourcing the best possible stock and selling it on to an appreciative audience – in doing so, technology and logistics must act as their servants, not their masters.

This 2023 guide joins its predecessors in being intuitive and useful for art and antiques dealers who want to navigate and benefit from the hugely successful multiple platforms available online today.
